> To: Like-minded political organisations, cooperative movements, ecological alliances, independent trade unions, Indigenous solidarity networks and community-led initiatives.

>
> Date: 29 October 2026

A SHARED MANDATE FOR A SHARED FUTURE

The Sharing Party has secured its mandate through an online election. We now extend an open invitation to fellow movements, organisations and communities to join us in shaping the future of our voluntary parallel society.

We do not believe that the responsibility for building a moneyless, ecologically sustainable society should rest with a single political organisation. A transformation of this scale requires collective wisdom, pluralism, practical experience and democratic cooperation.

We therefore invite organisations that share our commitment to social justice, cooperative provision, ecological stewardship and democratic accountability to take up equal representation alongside our Executive Council in the Supreme Democratic Direction of the parallel economy.

Our invitation extends to organisations including The Co-operative Party, Your Party, the Green Party, independent trade unions, Indigenous solidarity networks and other compatible movements. This invitation does not imply their endorsement or participation; each organisation would determine independently whether to engage.

We ask prospective partners to join us not as subordinate branches of a single party, but as independent participants in a democratic coalition of caretakers.

PILLAR I — CO-DIRECTING THE COMMONS

We invite coalition partners to work with our Land and Resource Collective to develop a system of shared stewardship over the land, infrastructure and productive resources on which our society depends.

Our objective is to expand public, cooperative and community-managed trusts capable of providing housing, food, energy, transport and other essential services according to social need and ecological responsibility.

The transition would be developed through voluntary transfers, negotiated agreements, cooperative acquisitions, public-interest arrangements and other lawful mechanisms appropriate to each asset.

Participating organisations would help establish transparent stewardship standards, community participation rights, ecological safeguards and accountability mechanisms. Indigenous communities must be able to define their own participation and priorities, including their rights and claims concerning ancestral lands and resources.

Our principle is straightforward: stewardship must serve people and the living world, rather than treating the extraction of private profit as the overriding purpose of economic life.

PILLAR II — SHAPING THE ALGORITHMIC GUARDRAILS

We invite coalition partners to participate directly in the oversight of our AI Advisor and its predictive resource-planning systems.

The AI Advisor is intended to forecast social needs, identify resource constraints, model production alternatives and help coordinate the parallel economy. It is not a sovereign authority.

Coalition partners would contribute to the standards governing its operation, including:

- Human welfare and equitable access to essential services.
- Worker health, safety and dignity.
- Indigenous knowledge and historical justice.
- Ecological limits, carbon accounting and biodiversity protection.
- Data privacy, cybersecurity and transparent resource accounting.
- Independent auditing, contestability and human review of consequential decisions.

The AI Advisor may calculate options and disclose the consequences of alternative policies. Decisions about priorities, acceptable compromises and social objectives remain with accountable human institutions.

No organisation should be required to surrender its ethical judgement to an algorithm, and no elected body should be permitted to disguise a political decision as a technical necessity.

PILLAR III — MOBILISING THE NON-COMBATIVE DEFENCES

We invite partners to help establish our Non-Combative Defences: a national logistical resilience workforce dedicated to protecting communities and maintaining essential services during crises.

Its remit would include disaster relief, flood response, climate emergency logistics, infrastructure repair, emergency supplies, ecological restoration and support for communities affected by disruption.

The workforce would operate under clear civilian oversight, published operating procedures, appropriate training and independent accountability.

Its guiding principles would be non-violence, humanitarian service, respect for human rights and the protection of civilian life.

Participating organisations would help design training programmes, coordinate local capabilities, establish emergency supply networks and develop methods for maintaining essential services during periods of social or environmental stress.

PILLAR IV — DECOUPLING THE WORKFORCE

We invite trade unions, cooperatives, worker associations and community organisations to collaborate with our Labour Collectives in developing a voluntary pathway towards economic independence from conventional wage-based provision.

This programme would help participating workers identify alternative livelihoods, join cooperative production, access shared services and contribute their skills to the parallel economy.

The transition would require dependable provision of essential goods and services, transparent membership arrangements, retraining opportunities and protections against economic insecurity.

No worker should be pressured to abandon employment before adequate alternatives exist. Participation must remain voluntary, and workers must retain the ability to organise, disagree, change roles and leave the programme.

A COALITION WITHOUT POLITICAL ABSORPTION

We recognise that each participating organisation has its own history, constituency, constitution, political programme and traditions of organising. Joining the coalition would not require an organisation to dissolve its identity or abandon its independent activities.

We propose a shared constitutional framework establishing:

- Equal coalition representation: Each founding partner receives an equal seat on the proposed coalition council.
- Democratic decision-making: Published voting procedures and transparent records.
- Human control of technology: The AI Advisor remains advisory and cannot override democratic decisions.
- Ecological responsibility: Decisions assessed against environmental limits.
- Citizen participation: Scrutiny, petitions, and referendums.
- Organisational independence: Partners retain identities and may withdraw.
- Accountability and due process: Disputes addressed through independent review.

AN INVITATION TO BUILD TOGETHER

We invite prospective partners to enter an initial period of dialogue to determine shared objectives, identify differences, and assess practical capabilities. The first task is to identify what our organisations can build together: reliable provision, cooperative infrastructure, and a system in which technology remains accountable to human purposes.
